hips like a kilt, the ends being knotted in front or being passed under a girde and sticking up above the waist-line.

"Men in the Old Kingdom almost invariably clipped their hair close and shaved their faces, although up to the fifth dynasty they sometimes wore slight mustaches, but shepherds occasionally allowed their hair to grow, a custom generally considered unclean. The upper classes wore wigs of two kinds—either short and close-fitting, with tight little curls in horizontal rows, or long and bushy, parted in the middle and falling well over the shoulders. Such wigs were probably made of sheep's wool, and actual specimens have been found. When a man wished to assume his full dignity, he attached a false beard of pleated hair to his chin by means of straps. Sandals, which were made of reeds or leather, with a strap over the instep, connected with another strap which passed between the toes, were worn irrespective of class, except in the presence of superiors, but the Egyptian commonly preferred to go barefoot.

"By the time of the Middle Kingdom ordinary individuals had adopted the pleated kilt, which for a time, at least in the Old Kingdom, had been the peculiar property of the King; however, it is doubtful if the people ever wore it of gold. On a wooden statuette of Sesostris I., in the Eighth Egyptian room, this kilt is represented as pleated all around, the two ends curving symmetrically in front up to the girdle. The King also wears the red crown symbolic of lower Egypt, while the mate to this statuette, which is now in the Cairo Museum, wears the white crown of Upper Egypt.

"Other statuettes, in the Sixth Egyptian Room, show what a variety of skirts existed at the time. The old forms continued, although there was a tendency toward a narrower, longer skirt. The triangular projection, so fashionable in the first dynasty, became subdued until it was quite modest. The long skirt which has been described as typical of this time often had a high waist line. It was at this time that clothing for the upper part of the body first appeared, and a curious cape was sometimes pinned around the shoulders. A heavy cloak or shawl, probably of wool, worn in the Old Kingdom as an outer garment by both men and women, now became common.

"Changes in the costumes of women from the Old to the Middle Kingdom were slight, but there were a few innovations that showed the tendency toward elaboration. A plain white tunic was sometimes covered with a network of brightly colored beads in diamond pattern with a bead fringe at the bottom. A similar dress, exceptionally gay in color, dates from the sixth dynasty. One statuette from Assiut shows a white tunic with a wide border on the bottom representing birds' wings or a leaf pattern, the latter more likely, since it is painted in green."

"I asked for a transfer," the visitor said, "and, ding me, I'm a-goin' to get transferred, too."

Now, it takes a good man to argue a conductor out of anything. However, at the end of thirty minutes the conductor on the West Broadway car admitted he was whipped. He allowed all of them to ride.

"Whew!" he whistled, mopping his brow, "here's hoping that fellow soon learns city ways."

A. J. Anderson, known among his friends as president of the Kind Words Club, is fond of telling a story about two negroes who were discussing the sounding propensities of the First Regiment Armory. Scarcely a day passes that Mr. Anderson does not tell this story. The two darkies were standing within the armory building, looking over the spacious interior. One remarked that it was a great gathering place, or words to that general effect. "Yas, sah," replied the other. "Dis am a great buildin'. But it am gwine to be the finest in this hyah country w'en dey gets dem accozelums out of hyah."

It happened last Friday afternoon, the morning of the day they were holding the baby contest at the State Fair, you know. The New Reporter was very busy writing the first of a string of nine or ten stories that had just been telephoned in. "Br-r-r-r-ing," "Br-r-r-r-ing" goes the strident, imperious telephone bell. Business of inward but fervent cursing. "Br-r-r-r-ing, br-r-r-ing," comes the call again, the bell now doing an encore for a small and unappreciative audience. There is nothing to do but answer it, so the N. R. takes down the receiver and a gentle feminine voice queries: "Is this the Times?" Being informed it is, the voice continues:

"Well, this is Mrs. La de Da. I called you up to see if you could tell me the winners in the baby contest at the fair to-day."

"But the contest won't be decided until 2:30 this afternoon, madam," the New Reporter makes answer.

"Yes, I know, but I thought you might tell me in advance what babies won the prizes. You see, a friend called me up from the fair grounds and told me to send my baby down. It's such a delicate child, and it's a little bit cold this morning. I wouldn't like to send it all the way down there without knowing if it won a prize or not. You see? (But, madam—) I can't leave the house, and I wouldn't think of trusting the child in a rough street car, so I'll have to get Mary to call a taxi and take it down. I guess."

She pauses for breath, and the N. R. hurriedly attempts to end the unknown's trouble-telling oration. But, no. It starts again.

"Are you sure you can't tell me the

SAME FAMILY NAME.

(Boston Transcript.)

An Irishman was seated in a railway carriage next to a very pompous looking man, with whom he commenced a conversation in a rather free and easy manner. At length the pompous one said: "My good man, reserve your conversation for one of your own equals. I would have you know that I am a K. C." The Irishman jumped up and held out his hand. "Begorry, shake!" he exclaimed. "O'm a Casey meself."

PAPER IN GERMANY

Owing to the scarcity of print in Germany and the consequent price many of the smaller, throughout the empire have to necessary to suspend publication porarily at least, while others have greatly reduced their output number of pages. The newspaper publishers of Wurttemberg called a session to consider the situation and have passed resolutions upon the Government to place price on print paper in order to protect the smaller newspapers.

In Austria the Government is ready taken hold of the matter and limiting them to a certain number of pages each day and also fix price at which they can be sold. This manner it is hoped to prevent further shortage, for no matter exigencies arise newspapers publish any more pages than the number to which they have been accustomed. The scheme has proved successful, far, and as a result no more in the price of print paper are expected.

FROM WOMEN TO WARE

(London Answers.)

A patriotic grocer in a small village decided that either his assistant must go to the war or he himself was single, his and sisters being well provided from their shares in the business. Mackay, the assistant, promptly, and presently found in command of the business. A few days later the master was founded to meet his late assistant tired in khaki, "somewhere in 'Hie mon," he said angrily "no tell ye tae stay at hame in 'o'ma shop?"

"So I thought at the time, I replied Mackay, "but I sune it wisna only the shop I was in 'o', but a yer wumanfolk. 'I tae maseit, 'gin ye've got gang an' fecht someone ye can I jined."

At last she found one which very suitable. After inspecting roughly, the owner led her to a drawing room. There the good eye fell suddenly on a beautiful picture of the "Madonna," a famous painting. Opposite another copy of Gainsborough's "Devonshire."
